

Contents

List of illustrations	vi
Acknowledgments	vii
Introduction Femininity through the Looking-Glass	1
1 'That that is, is': The Bondage of Stories in Jean Ingelow's Mopsa the Fairy (1869)	17
2 MacDonald's Fallen Angel in 'The Light Princess' (1864)	33
3 Drawing 'Muchnesses' in Lewis Carroll's Alice's Adventures in Wonderland (1865)	49
4 Taming the Female Body in Juliana Horatia Ewing's 'Amelia and the Dwarfs' (1870) and Christina Rossetti's Speaking Likenesses (1874)	67
5 A Journey through the Crystal Palace: Rhoda Broughton's Politics of Plate-Glass in Not Wisely But Too Well (1867)	89
6 Investigating Books of Beauties in Charles Dickens's Bleak House (1853) and M.E. Braddon's Lady Audley's Secret (1862)	113
7 Shaping the Female Consumer in Wilkie Collins's No Name (1862)	133
8 Rachel Leveson and the London Beauty Salon: Female Aestheticism and Criminality in Wilkie Collins's Armadale (1864)	147
9 Wilkie Collins's Modern Snow White: Arsenic Consumption and Ghastly Complexions in The Law and the Lady (1875)	159
Conclusion	173
Bibliography	177
Index	185