

East Meets West - Banking, Commerce and Investment in the Ottoman Empire

Edited by Philip L. Cottrell, University of Leicester, UK and co-editors, Monica Pohle Fraser, Iain L. Fraser, EABFH, Germany

Studies in Banking and Financial History

June 2008
214 pages
978-0-7546-6443-7
Includes 9 b&w line drawings

234 x 156 mm
Hardback
$124.95

Bringing together cultural, economic and social historians from across Europe and beyond, this volume offers a consideration from a number of perspectives of the principal forces that further integrated the Ottoman Empire and Western Europe during the first century of industrialisation. The essays not only review and analyse the commercial, financial and monetary factors, negative as well as positive, that bore upon the region's initial stages of modern transformation, but also provide a ready introduction to major aspects of the economy and society of the Ottoman Empire in the nineteenth century.

Beginning with two chapters providing the context to the development of Ottoman relations with Western Europe up to the second half of the nineteenth century, the collection then moves on to explore more specific questions of trade links, the impact of improved transportation and communications, the development and changing nature of Ottoman finance and banking, as well as European investment in Turkey. The outcome is a broad ranging consideration of how all these issues played a fundamental role in the final decades of the Ottoman Empire and the emergence of Turkey as a modern state with links to both east and west.

The essays in this collection derive from the EABFH colloquium held in the Imperial Mint, Istanbul, in October 1999.

Contents

Introduction, Philip L. Cottrell; Evolution of domestic borrowing in the Ottoman empire, Murat Çizakça; From bimetallism to the 'limping gold standard': the Ottoman monetary system in the 19th century, Sevket Pamuk; Trading links: patterns of information and communication: the steamship and the modernization of East-West commerce, David M. Williams; Europe and the Ottoman empire in mid-19th century. Development of a bourgeoisie in the European mirror, Çağlar Keyder; A survey of European investment in Turkey, 1854-1914. Banks and the finance of the state and railway construction, Philip L. Cottrell; A general survey of the history of the Imperial Ottoman Bank, André Autheman; State borrowing and the Imperial Ottoman Bank in the bankruptcy era (1863-1877), Christopher Clay; French investments in public and private funds in the Ottoman empire on the eve of the Great War, Jacques Thobie; The financial structure of the stock exchange in the late Ottoman empire, Zafer Toprak; Anatolian and Baghdad railways: investment and foreign policy before the Great War, Boris Barth; Bibliography; Index.

About the Editor

Philip L. Cottrell is Professor of Financial History at the University of Leicester, UK. Co-editors Monica Pohle Fraser and Iain I. Fraser are based at the European Association for Banking and Financial History, Frankfurt, Germany.

www.ashgate.com/isbn/9780754664437

ASHGATE

To order this book please visit www.ashgate.com, or email orders@ashgate.com
A 10% discount applies to orders placed through www.ashgate.com